

Minutes of the August RBA Board Meeting

Still in a Balancing Act

- The RBA minutes of the August meeting unsurprisingly reiterated that “the most prudent course was likely to be a period of stability in interest rates” suggesting that the central bank will continue to sit pat for some time.
- The RBA expects GDP to have grown at a moderate pace in the June quarter and to be below trend over 2014-15. Indeed, this less than upbeat assessment on the economy was reflected in the RBA’s latest growth forecasts, published in the August Statement on Monetary Policy.
- There was some further evidence of caution regarding the current economic recovery. The RBA Board members noted that “there was inevitably a significant degree of uncertainty about the outlook, given the number of forces working in different directions”.
- The RBA’s concerns continue to be the transition from declining mining investment, particularly given fiscal consolidation and the high Australian dollar.
- RBA Governor Glenn Stevens will speak before Parliament tomorrow in his semi-annual testimony. Stevens may shed some more light on the RBA’s thoughts on the economy and monetary policy.
- The RBA will clearly need some further evidence that the recovery is strengthening before looking to raise rates. It is unlikely to get enough evidence before the end of the year. However, dwelling investment, strong export growth and household consumption are still expected to support growth. We expect that this recovery, while uneven, will continue and that the need for record low interest rates will eventually pass.

The RBA minutes of the August meeting unsurprisingly reiterated that “the most prudent course was likely to be a period of stability in interest rates” suggesting that the central bank will continue to sit pat for some time.

There was some further evidence of caution regarding the current economic recovery. The RBA expects GDP to have grown at a moderate pace in the June quarter and to be below trend over 2014-15. Indeed, this less than upbeat assessment on the economy was reflected in the RBA’s latest growth forecasts which imply quarterly growth of no more than 0.5% in each of the three quarters until the end of the year.

The RBA Board members noted that “there was inevitably a significant degree of uncertainty about the outlook, given the number of forces working in different directions”. This concern over the impact of major shocks facing the domestic economy, including the sharp decline in mining investment and the transition to growth driven by more non-mining sectors, has been noted previously by the RBA. However, this “uncertainty” could also highlight an increased risk of a revision to these growth forecasts.

The recovery in non-mining investment remained tentative. “Liaison continued to indicate that firms were reluctant to undertake significant investment projects until they experienced a sustained period of strong demand.”

Board members had also noted that inflation in the June quarter had been “a little higher than expected.” However, the RBA has hinted that it is quite relaxed about the inflation outlook. Further, the RBA’s latest inflation forecasts were revised lower in the near-term, thanks to the impact of the carbon price repeal, although it is expected that the RBA will likely look through this impact. Additionally, the RBA expects inflation to be consistent with its 2 to 3 per cent inflation target.

The RBA devoted some commentary to the low volatility in financial markets, and noted that in foreign exchange markets, “volatility remaining around historic lows”. The concerns surrounding the Australian dollar’s resilience remained, and the RBA continued to highlight the misalignment of the Australian dollar with fundamentals. Again, the RBA referred to lower commodity prices, but in these minutes, the RBA also pointed out that interest rate differentials between Australia and most other advanced economies had narrowed.

RBA Governor Glenn Stevens will speak before Parliament tomorrow in his semi-annual testimony. Stevens may shed some more light on the RBA’s thoughts on the economy and monetary policy.

The RBA will clearly need some further evidence that the recovery is strengthening before looking to raise rates. It is unlikely to get enough evidence before the end of the year. However, dwelling investment, strong export growth and household consumption are still expected to support growth. We expect that this recovery, while uneven, will continue and that the need for record low interest rates will eventually pass.

Janu Chan, Senior Economist
Ph: 02-8253-0898

Contact Listing

Chief Economist

Besa Deda
dedab@bankofmelbourne.com.au
(02) 8254 3251

Senior Economist

Hans Kunnen
kunnenh@bankofmelbourne.com.au
(02) 8254 8322

Senior Economist

Josephine Horton
hortonj@bankofmelbourne.com.au
(02) 8253 6696

Economist

Janu Chan
chanj@bankofmelbourne.com.au
(02) 8253 0898

The Detail

The information contained in this report (“the Information”) is provided for, and is only to be used by, persons in Australia. The information may not comply with the laws of another jurisdiction. The Information is general in nature and does not take into account the particular investment objectives or financial situation of any potential reader. It does not constitute, and should not be relied on as, financial or investment advice or recommendations (expressed or implied) and is not an invitation to take up securities or other financial products or services. No decision should be made on the basis of the Information without first seeking expert financial advice. For persons with whom Bank of Melbourne has a contract to supply Information, the supply of the Information is made under that contract and Bank of Melbourne’s agreed terms of supply apply. Bank of Melbourne does not represent or guarantee that the Information is accurate or free from errors or omissions and Bank of Melbourne disclaims any duty of care in relation to the Information and liability for any reliance on investment decisions made using the Information. The Information is subject to change. Terms, conditions and any fees apply to Bank of Melbourne products and details are available. Bank of Melbourne or its officers, agents or employees (including persons involved in preparation of the Information) may have financial interests in the markets discussed in the Information. Bank of Melbourne owns copyright in the information unless otherwise indicated. The Information should not be reproduced, distributed, linked or transmitted without the written consent of Bank of Melbourne.